HOW WE GET THINGS DONE

- * Anymore, major competitors in any industry all have essentially the same strategies and tools.....
- * Therefore, the success of one competitor versus another is found in two things:
 - * It's People
 - * Their ability to be more effective in their jobs, including implementing strategy, versus competition.
- * Greater EFFECTIVENESS is found in.....
 - * Being forward looking; anticipating and embracing change.
 - * Always acting with a sense of urgency; a bias toward action..
 - * Attention to detail – doing 1,000 things 1% better than the competition.
 - * Differentiation – delivering more than your customer expects.
 - * CREATING SOMETHING THAT WASN'T GOING TO HAPPEN ANYWAY.

IF YOU WANT TO GET AHEAD ON THE JOB, NEVER SAY...

BY JOHN R. GRAHAM

What does it take to get ahead in business today? While the experts may offer such suggestions as possessing cutting-edge skills and being a good team player, there are other even more essential attributes.

Clearly separating the average employee from the superior worker are basic — but often lacking — qualities.

The techniques are actually quite simple, but they have one fundamental, common characteristic that makes them so valuable: Each one produces positive action.

The quickest way to achieve success is to eliminate the negatives. If you want to be considered a "star" performer, here is what you should strive to avoid.

1. Never say, "They didn't get back to me." Or, "They are getting back to me." Both are equally disastrous. Expecting someone to get back to you stops the action. Take the initiative. Never wait for anyone to return your telephone call.

2. Never say, "I thought someone else was taking care of that." Excuses indicate a roadblock to action. You do what you're told, but don't think about what should be happening. Always ask questions to keep things moving.

3. Never say, "No one ever told me." Let a supervisor hear you talk this way very often and you will have made a very clear statement about the way you work. You operate in a tunnel, oblivious to everything that is going on around you.

4. Never say, "I just assumed..." Making assumptions is the best way to become instantly obsolete. This is the crux of which disaster is made.

5. Never say, "I left her a message." So what? Leaving the message doesn't mean you have accomplished anything or that the responsibility is now passed to the person you called.

6. Never say, "I didn't know you wanted me to do that." Telling is out in business. Expressing statements such as this only indicates that you are only capable of doing what you are told to do and nothing more.

7. Never say, "I didn't have time." And don't bother with "I was too busy," either. If you find yourself saying things like this, you are writing your employment obituary. Your job tombstone will read, "Couldn't handle the job."

8. Never say, "I didn't think to ask about that." Anticipating what needs to be done is the job. An inability to see down the road may indicate that you lack the ability to understand and grasp relationships.

9. Never say, "But it isn't due until..." Last minute performance is out. Managers know that what's done at the last minute doesn't leave time for proper evaluation, revision and refinement. Going with the second-best doesn't get the business.

10. Never say, "But they said it would be done on time..." There's only one problem — it isn't. Why? Because you failed to check to determine progress and possible problems.

11. Never say, "It's scheduled for..." The schedule is only important if completion will be on time. Schedules must be actively verified as many times as necessary.

12. Never say, "As I understand it..." Stop playing games. You're hedging and that's trouble. Using words like this indicates that you're a bystander, not an active participant. Spectators don't play the game — and they don't get the rewards.

13. Never say, "I'll do it as soon as I get it from..." Sorry, not good enough for today's competitive work place. If you're just a cog in the process, you're out of a job. Even though it may not be your fault that it's late, you're smart if you make it your responsibility to get it in your hands on time.

14. Never say, "I'm going to get on that right away..." Sure you are! Now that someone had to remind you about it. You are communicating the message that you are disorganized and deal only with assignments when they are called to your attention. Either your days are numbered or you will never be promoted.

15. Never say, "I've been trying to get everyone together, but..." It doesn't wash today. Using these words makes it appear that you can't handle responsibility or that your associates and coworkers don't respond to you. Either way, it means trouble.

16. Never say, "We've been playing telephone tag..." The words "telephone tag" should never be heard. On the surface, you may think you're letting it be known how busy you are.

Not so. Why? If you're playing "telephone tag," you do not live in real time. Do whatever is necessary to stop this from happening. If necessary, get a beeper and publicize your number.

17. Never say, "I haven't been able to get through to her..." Of course, voice mail is a terrible problem today. The barriers are higher than ever and seemingly impenetrable at times. Get creative. Send flowers. Hire a limo. Do whatever it takes to get attention. Sitting back and making excuses only is sure sign that you can't cut the mustard.

The message in business today is very clear. The only measure for success is performance. Whatever the roadblocks, it's your job to remove them. If not, you'll be perceived as one of them. ☐
